Expectations of 4-H Families and Members Enrolled in Community Clubs

In a Kansas 4-H community club, families and their children play a crucial role in fostering a collaborative and communicative environment that ensures the club's success. Their responsibilities revolve around active participation, open communication, teamwork, and support for both club activities and leadership development.

Role of Families

Families serve as the backbone of the 4-H experience by encouraging their children to engage fully in club activities. They help by ensuring their children attend meetings, meet deadlines, and fulfill their project responsibilities. Parents and guardians also contribute by volunteering in various capacities, such as assisting with events, serving as club leaders, or providing mentorship to members.

Effective communication is key to a thriving club. Families should stay informed by reading club newsletters, emails, and updates from leaders. They should proactively ask questions, clarify expectations, and communicate any concerns or scheduling conflicts with their leaders first. By maintaining an open dialogue with club leaders, other parents, and members, families contribute to a positive and well-organized club environment.

Role of Youth Members

Children enrolled in 4-H are expected to actively participate in club meetings, projects, and events. They should demonstrate responsibility by completing project work, engage in discussions, and take on leadership roles when possible. Members are encouraged to voice their ideas, collaborate with peers, and uphold the values of respect and teamwork.

Good communication is vital among members to ensure everyone is informed and involved. This includes listening attentively, speaking clearly, and contributing ideas constructively. Members should also show appreciation for their fellow members' efforts and support one another in achieving their goals.

Working Together for Success

The success of a 4-H club in the Meadowlark Extension District depends on the collective effort of families, youth members, and club leaders. Families and children should embrace teamwork by sharing responsibilities, resolving conflicts respectfully, and encouraging one another's growth. A positive attitude and willingness to contribute make a significant difference in creating a welcoming and productive club atmosphere.

By maintaining strong communication, participating actively, and working together, families and youth ensure that their 4-H club remains a thriving community where members can develop essential life skills, leadership abilities, and lasting friendships.

Citizenship in Action Over President's Day Weekend

Eleven youth from the Meadowlark District traveled to the State Capitol in Topeka where they participated in the Citizenship in Action (CIA) State 4-H Event. This is a unique event where Kansas 4-H members have the opportunity to get acquainted with their government system, tour the state capitol, and also discuss the real bills that Kansas' senators and representatives are discussing at this time.
